ANOTHER HORRIBLE MURDER.

A Wife Beats Her Wife to Death.

(From the St. Louis Times, June 30.)

Yesterday one of the most brutal murders ever heard in our midst for a long time occurred in the alley on Spruce street, now Morlot street, between Fifth and Sixth streets. William Gahan beating his wife to death. The circumstances of the case, developed at the Coroner's inquest, show that some four years since Gahan married the defendant, she being his second wife. By his first wife he had four children, who were unmercifully beaten by their father, for the first of January last, and Gahan, who was addicted to habits of intemperance, when under the influence of liquor would, on the slightest provocation, be turned her out of doors, for being drunk, when she slept on the porch.

On the next morning, Friday, she knocked at the door and promised to reform, but was at last taken her back only to receive a Gahan consented, and left her with the child, going to his daily work. Scarcely had he taken a couple of steps when the wife of one of the children ran for ten cents' worth of whiskey, which she drank on the street, then sending her with some beer, having no pennies, she on receiving it, also drank the liquid down to the last drop. When Gahan got home from work he commenced abusing the wife, the children meanwhile escaping. The smallest girl ran away, and proceeding to the dwelling of Mr. Sandford and W. C. Wilhite, on Market street, told him what was going on. Those gentlemen were about to go to [illegible] and Gahan was seen coming out of the house with a large club in his hand. He had evidently been to the river bottom, where, after beating his wife to the ground, after which he beat her body for a long time, until life was entirely called out. He then left the house, and went to the saloon of Mr. Sandford, and told him what he had done, and that he had murdered his wife. Mr. Sandford and W. C. Wilhite, on hearing this, proceeded to the house, and found the woman lying on the floor, her body as it lay stretched upon the floor of the dining room, presented a ghastly and horrible spectacle. Her face was entirely mute and scarcely a spot of flesh could be seen, so covered was it with bruises and blood, while near by stood the instrument of death, matted with blood and hair, the fragments of a broken chair.

About 10 o'clock Officer Smith, hearing of the matter, repaired to the spot and arrested Gahan, who was taken in charge on the way by the Coroner. He made no denial of the crime, and said he had merely "quashed" his fat, heavy darling, during drunken fit.

The Coroner held an inquest, the jury rendering a verdict that Gahan came to his death by blows received at the hands of her husband. She was a native of Derby county, Ireland, twenty-eight years old, and had resided here [illegible] years.

The prisoner was a mechanic in the employ of Westendike & Eaton, stove plate, No. 1 Market street, and was considered a first-class workman. He is about forty years old, and the youngest about six—all girls.

A FEARFUL LIGHTNING STROKE.

Result of a Thunderbolt in the Midst of a Crowd of People—Nearly One Hundred Persons Struck Down—Many Reported to Survive—A Scene of Indescribable Confusion.

Last Tuesday afternoon, about 5 o'clock, a perfect cyclone burst upon the city of Belleville, the county seat of St. Clair county, Illinois, and the concussion brought terror to the hearts of all who heard it. Peal after peal of thunder, not instantly as awful as the following one of the clerk of the storm, but more and more terrific. About a hundred people were on the public square, and at the moment of the first crash, while some were running for shelter, others were standing in the doorways, and a few were still on the streets. As old Mr. Thomas Jackson, John Goodman, and two or three others were passing the corner of Main and Washington streets, a flash of lightning struck the house just east of them, and at the same moment a ball of fire descended from the clouds, and struck the ground in front of the group. The concussion was terrific. It is said that a number of persons were struck by the lightning, but that the whole force was concentrated on the old gentleman, Jackson, who was instantly killed. The bolt struck the ground in front of him, and then glanced to the right and left, striking down all the persons who were standing near him. Mr. Jackson was the only one killed outright, but a number were rendered insensible, and for a few minutes, while dazed, were unable to move. Mr. Jackson was a resident of Belleville for many years, and was highly respected by all who knew him. He was a native of Kentucky, and was about seventy-five years of age. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was a consistent Christian gentleman. He was the father of Mrs. Judge Underwood, of this city, and was on a visit to his daughter at the time of his death. His remains were taken to Belleville for interment.

The lightning struck a post in the centre of the main business block, where Henry Thiot, the hardware merchant, was standing, and from there it struck a horse that was attached to a buggy standing in front of the store of Mr. Thiot, owned by John Schmidt. The horse was killed instantly, while Mr. Thiot received a severe shock, from which he is still suffering. The lightning struck the ground in front of the store, and then glanced to the left, striking down a number of persons who were standing on the sidewalk. Among the number was Miss Nellie Lowe, who wore a white and black checked dress, and upon whom the lightning left its mark. The latter scarred, but did not take away her life. Mrs. Thiot, wife of Mr. Thiot, was on the sidewalk, in the act of passing down into the store, when she received a severe shock. A man from Illinois was standing on the sidewalk, and when the lightning struck the ground in front of him it made a mark in the pavement. A man from Illinois was standing on the sidewalk, and when the lightning struck the ground in front of him it made a mark in the pavement. The mark was found to be about two inches deep, and the bullet resembled a pea ball, and could be plainly traced down the track, across the sheet of the Court-house.

The most fearful consternation existed during the moments that it was discovered how fatal the lightning bolt had been in its infliction, and the excitement was most intense. The ground was strewn with the bodies of the unfortunate, and the sight was terrible to the attention of a horrific meeting which had been called in the public square. Those who were sitting on it at the time were not injured, nor was the machine at all damaged by the shock.

A CURIOUS CASE.

Mary Ahern a New York Impersonator.

(From the Albany Argus, June 30.)

A statement appeared in the Argus yesterday morning to the effect that Rev. S. S. Merrill, pastor of the Methodist church at Plattsburgh, was drowned in the Saranac river on Sunday, and that he and his son Charlie and John accompanied the party to bear the body home. Mr. Merrill went in the boat of the host to the place where the body was found, and in the river and was drowned. His wife and daughter were already in Plattsburgh to receive the remains.

Yesterday morning there arrived in this city the mother of the lady who was supposed to be drowned, and she identified the body as that of her daughter. The mother's name is Mrs. Ahern, and she resides in New York. She says that her daughter was married to Mr. Merrill about two years ago, and that they have since lived happily together. Mrs. Ahern says that her daughter was a member of the Methodist church, and that she was a consistent Christian lady.
